A 50-minute documentary on stripmining, "In Memory of The Land and People," will be shown at 12:10 p.m. Friday, Dec. 9, in room 307 of the University of Montana Botany Building. The film deals with stripmining and its socioeconomic and environmental effects on people. Scenes were shot in the U.S. and Canada.

The showing is the last part of the UM Botany Department's "Current Environmental Problems" lecture series. The series is coordinated by Meyer Chessin, a UM botany professor.

Ed Dobson, Billings, Northern Plains representative for Friends of the Earth, will be present to answer questions after the film.

The showing is open to the public without charge.
